Speaker: George Papanicolaou, Stanford University

Title: Probabilistic problems arising in imaging

Abstract:
I will review briefly the basics of image formation from sensor array data and the difficulties that arise when the ambient medium is complex and, of course, unknown. A variety of problems in modern probability arise, from ergodic theory to random matrices and optimization. I will formulate some of these problems and describe where we are with them at present.